A senior Conservative MP has been arrested on suspicion of rape and possession of drugs. Crispin Blunt made a statement yesterday after being taken to a room in his constituency on Thursday and later released on bail.

The MP for Basingstoke, a former justice minister and chair of parliament's foreign affairs committee, said he was confident the investigation would end without charge. He said he had previously reported an allegation of extortion to police in relation to the nation's film, and had spoken to officers several months ago.

Blunt's statement said: "I have been reported that an MP was involved in a relationship with an individual of race. I am confident that MP would be cleared. The fact of the matter is that I have been reported that I have been involved in a relationship with an individual of race. I am confident that I have been cleared of any involvement in this matter."

It is understood the MP has been suspended from his role and he has been asked to stay away from the constituency until the police inquiry is over.

A spokesman for the Home Office said: "We are conducting a criminal investigation into an allegation of rape and possession of controlled substances. He has been released on conditional police bail pending further investigation."

It is understood the MP has been suspended from his role and he has been asked to stay away from the constituency until the police inquiry is over.

Israel stages raid into Gaza as new phase of war begins

Peter Beaumont
Amos Ben-El-Mechaie

Israeli forces entered a new phase of their war against Hamas in Gaza yesterday, launching a substantial but limited raid into the coastal strip, as what was described as a 'pre-emptive strike' in preparation for a more sustained ground offensive.

Infantry backed by tanks and a commando battalion moved in under cover of night and attacked targets in an town lying just into the north of the territory, as Israeli forces moved the number of hostages continued to be held by the militant Islamic group to 22.

The Israeli raid, which moved about a kilometre into Gaza from the border town, came as IDF leaders prepared to call for "humanitarian corridors and pauses" in order to get urgently needed aid into the territory, according to the first draft of a plan to be approved at a meeting in Brussels yesterday.

More than 1,000 Palestinians have been killed in Gaza, according to the Hamas-run health ministry, and there are reports the toll could reach 2,000 if Israel pushes ahead with the ground invasion. The IDF said yesterday that "nowhere is safe" in Gaza.

The Israeli military said the operation, which came in heavy strikes, was designed to search for Hamas weapons and test Hamas's response, and that it would be a limited operation, not a full-scale invasion. It said it was not equipped with heavy anti-tank guided missiles, a source of major concern for Israeli military planners. According to a military spokesman, at least one Israeli tank was hit and a tank crew killed during the operation, but Israeli forces were left without losing casualties.

Gaza's main bridge, released by the Israeli Defence Forces, showed a column of at least a dozen Israeli tanks and other

There are more child amputees in Gaza than anywhere else in the world. What can the future hold for them?

Elaboration

The new evidence provides two headlines from The Guardian. However, neither of them matches the claim. The first headline is "Israel stages raid into Gaza as new phase of war begins," and the second is "There are more child amputees in Gaza than anywhere else in the world. What can the future hold for them?".

Final Judgement

The Guardian did publish articles about Gaza, but the provided evidence does not confirm the specific headline mentioned in the claim. The search results show different headlines related to Gaza.

Verdict: FALSE

Justification

The Guardian has published articles about Gaza, but the provided evidence does not confirm the specific headline "Gaza will rise from the ashes to become a city of the future to rival Bradford." The search results show different headlines related to Gaza, such as "Israel stages raid into Gaza as new phase of war begins" and "There are more child amputees in Gaza than anywhere else in the world. What can the future hold for them?"
