An ABC News article, published on July 8, 2025, reports that the Houthi rebels attacked ships in the Red Sea, killing mariners, after Trump's administration targeted the rebels in airstrikes, and that the Houthis pledged to stop attacking ships. Source The Wikipedia article on the Red Sea crisis mentions a 2025 U.S.–Houthi ceasefire and a 2025 Houthi attack on Tel Aviv airport, and that on May 6, 2024, Donald Trump announced a cessation of US strikes as a result of a bilateral ceasefire between the US and the Houthis. Elaboration

The evidence suggests that the Houthis were involved in military operations in international waters, specifically in the Red Sea, and that these operations continued into 2025. The evidence also indicates that Donald Trump ordered airstrikes against the Houthis and that a ceasefire was announced.

The ABC News article states that the Houthis pledged to stop attacking ships. However, the Wikipedia article mentions a 2025 Houthi attack on Tel Aviv airport, which contradicts the claim of a final cessation of military operations.

Based on the provided evidence, the claim cannot be fully verified. While there was a ceasefire and a pledge to stop attacking ships, the evidence also shows continued Houthi attacks. More information is needed to determine if the Houthis announced the final cessation of their military operations.

Final Judgement

The evidence indicates that the Houthis were involved in military operations in international waters, and that a ceasefire was announced. However, the evidence also shows continued Houthi attacks, which contradicts the claim of a final cessation of military operations.

Verdict: FALSE

Justification

The claim is false. While there was a ceasefire and a pledge to stop attacking ships, the Houthis continued attacks after Trump's election, as evidenced by attacks on ships and the Tel Aviv airport, according to sources like the ABC News article and the Wikipedia article on the Red Sea crisis.
