Elaboration

The evidence indicates that Russia's involvement in the California wildfires of January 2025 included commentary and offers of sanctuary, but not direct assistance. An article from The Dispatch states that Vladimir Saldo offered to accept Americans who lost their homes in the California fires, but only those who haven't supported Ukraine since February 2022. (<https://thedispatch.com/article/assessing-claims-that-russia-offered-sanctuary-to-california-fire-victims/>).

Additionally, an NPR article discusses how pro-Kremlin social media accounts spread a false narrative about the Los Angeles wildfires (<https://www.npr.org/2025/01/16/nx-s1-5259842/los-angeles-california-fires-russia-ukraine>).

The evidence does not explicitly state that Russia offered assistance for the California wildfires.

Final Judgement

The evidence suggests that Russia commented on the California wildfires and offered sanctuary to some victims, but there is no mention of Russia offering assistance. Therefore, the claim is not accurate.

false

Verdict: FALSE

Justification

The claim is inaccurate. While Russia commented on the California wildfires and offered sanctuary to some victims, there is no evidence of Russia offering direct assistance, as reported by sources like The Dispatch (<https://thedispatch.com/article/assessing-claims-that-russia-offered-sanctuary-to-california-fire-victims/>) and NPR (<https://www.npr.org/2025/01/16/nx-s1-5259842/los-angeles-california-fires-russia-ukraine>).
